This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

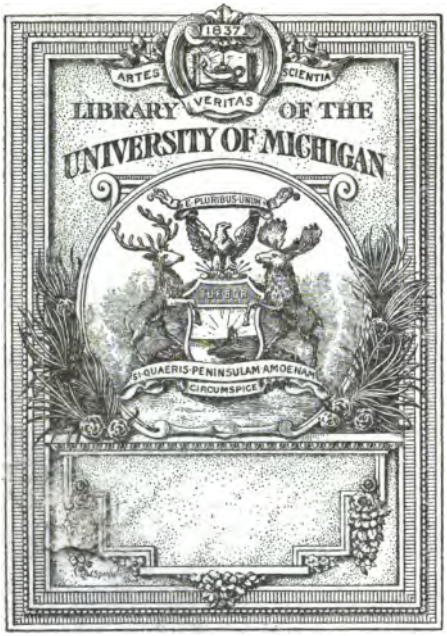
+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`



1837
ARTES
SCIENTIA
VERITAS
LIBRARY OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN
E PLURIBUS UNUM
SI QUAERIS PENINSULAM AMOENAM
CIRCUMSPICE

822.8
W9

WILD·JUSTICE
A DRAMATIC POEM

BY MARGARET
L. WOODS

SMITH.
ELDER&Co.
LONDON
1896

WILD JUSTICE

WILD JUSTICE

6065-0

BY

MARGARET L. WOODS

AUTHOR OF 'A VILLAGE TRAGEDY' 'LYRICS AND BALLADS' 'THE VAGABONDS' ETC.

LONDON
SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15 WATERLOO PLACE
1896

[All rights reserved]

4317

PREFACE

In explanation of the circumstances of the following dramatic poem, it may be necessary to state that light-houses could formerly be erected by private individuals, who were then empowered by Act of Parliament to raise dues on all ships passing them. That on the Skerries was in private hands so late as the year 1841.

The scene is laid on Ynys yr Unigdra off the Welsh coast, in the early years of this century. The island is in an estuary and is surrounded by quicksands, except on one side, where the channel of a river, deep but not wide, divides it from a small island of rock and firm sand. The two islands are connected by a wooden footbridge. Across the mouth of the river and the greater part of the estuary runs a bar of sand, dry at low tide and covered at high. The bar is separated from Ynys yr Unigdra by a belt of quicksand, but from the smaller island, where the sands are firm, it can be easily reached at low tide.

Ty Mawr is a grey, gaunt house, with straggling out-buildings. In front is a square garden with narrow paved walks, enclosed by a low stone wall; behind, some rising ground, and a wood of stunted oaks. It is separated only by a bare field from the shore, and looks out to sea over the quicksand and the bar. To the right the bay ends in a steep headland with some isolated rocks jutting out beyond it, on the largest one of which (Craig y Gwr) stands a recently built lighthouse. To the left is a wider extent of estuary, and in the distance a rocky coast backed by mountains. There are a few cottages on the island, but they are all on the other side. The action takes place principally in two rooms at Ty Mawr, both on the first floor; the great parlour and an inner room leading out of it. Both have windows towards the sea.

NOTE

I am indebted for the first lines of the Ballad in this play to the following two lines, quoted in Wuthering Heights :

It was far in the night and the bairnies grat,
The mither beneath the mools heard that.

PERSONAGES.

GRYFFITH GWYLLIM.

MRS. GWYLLIM, his wife.

OWAIN, a cripple
NELTO (ELLEN)
SHONNIN (JOHN)
A BABY
} their children.

[DAVID, LUCY, and other GWYLLIM children, who do not appear.]

WILD JUSTICE

SCENE I

The inner room at Ty Mawr. NELTO with a baby in her arms.

Nelto [singing].

In the dead of the night the children were weeping.
The mother heard that where she lay sleeping,
And scratched at the coffin lid.

The shrill of the lark, the scream of the owl,
The dogs that bark, and the storms that howl—
She never had heard them where she lay hid,
But she heard her poor little children weeping.

Enter SHONNIN carrying books.

Nelto. Home from school already?

Shonnin [throwing down his books]. Where's mother?

Nelto. The Vicar's over here to-day, and she's gone to see him.

Shonnin. What for?

Nelto. For the same reason that she went last Saturday to see our dear cousin at the Port.

Shonnin. But he's a lawyer. How can the parson help us?

Nelto. He could at least find out if there's no law in England that will help us. O Shonnin! Fancy if mother and all of us could go away and live somewhere where we should never, never see father again!

Shonnin. We will when I've earned money enough.

Nelto. But can we? Ah! there she is, coming in at the garden gate.

Shonnin [leaning out of the window]. Mother!

Mrs. Gwyllim [from the garden]. My child?

Nelto. Hush! Didn't you see Owain was asleep? [Leaning out of the window.] Come in quick, mother, but don't wake Owain. He's asleep in the great parlour.

[Sings] In the lone of the night the sexton lay dreaming,
He turned him about: 'Who is sighing and screaming?'
'Oh help me out, Sexton, for pity, pity's sake!'
'Hush! hush! hush!
The dead must sleep sound and never wake.'

A shimmer of wings went over the sky,
A murmur of strings: 'Oh, pass me not by!'
—The poor mother wants to get out—

'Oh come, help me soon!'
But the angels harp on 'twixt the earth and the moon.

[MRS. GWYLLIM comes in.

Shonnin. So you've been to the parson, mother.

Nelto. Well, what did he say?

Mrs. Gwyllim. He said I must have patience.

Nelto. Patience! The fool!

Mrs. Gwyllim. I have had patience for one and twenty years.

Shonnin. Did he say nothing else?

Mrs. Gwyllim. Yes. He said that Holy Matrimony is God's ordinance, and that a good wife by her meek and pious conversation should reclaim an erring husband.

Nelto. Erring! That's good.

Shonnin. He cannot know—

Mrs. Gwyllim. What is there all the parish does not know? But Mr. Gwyllim is a Welshman; he speaks their own language, and drinks with them at their ale-houses. Besides, the Vicar says he is a public benefactor. This lighthouse of his on Craig y Gwr will not only put money into his pocket, which they hope will overflow into theirs, but it will bring traffic to Porth Davrarch.

Nelto. The coward! I feared he'd never dare to stir a finger against a Gwyllim.

Mrs. Gwyllim. I was a fool to go to him. I'd not have gone if there'd been anyone else to go to. But who do I know except Mr. Gwyllim's companions? The Vicar was my last hope, and now he's failed me. O look, look! Your father's in the garden. He's coming in. What can be the matter?

Nelto. Something. He's shaking his fist.

Shonnin. In a black rage. But never mind, mother; it's me he's angry with, not you.

Mrs. Gwyllim. You? O Shonnin, what have you been doing? Stop here; you must. I'll go and meet him. You'll only make it worse if you come.

Nelto. Wait, mother, I'll come with you.

Mrs. Gwyllim. No; not for worlds. He's coming up.

Gwyllim [without]. Mrs. Gwyllim!

Mrs. Gwyllim. He might take the baby and fling her down stairs, as he did Owain, and make a cripple of her, as he did of Owain. No—no—

Gwyllim [appearing in the doorway]. Mrs. Gwyllim!

SCENE II

The great parlour. MR. and MRS. GWYLLIM, OWAIN in a wheeled chair by the window. The door leading into the inner room is half open, and NELTO, walking up and down there with the baby, continues to sing from time to time in a low voice, while her father is speaking.

Nelto is singing:

In the dark underground the mother lay weeping;
Through the deep underground a devil was creeping.
'Hush, hush, hush!
What are you crying about?
Your gravestone is carven with cherubim faces,
Your pall is enwoven with silver laces.'

Gwyllim. Answer, you sullen slut! I'll make you answer.
What have you told the parson? I'll inform you
What I have told him: you're an unfaithful wife.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Unfaithful? You said that?

Gwyllim. Ay, so I did.

Provoke me, stare upon me with those worn
Lacklustre eyes ; I'll tell your lover's name
To who cares listen, tell the amorous story
Of certain letters—love-letters found cherished——

Nelto [stands by the open door and sings loud].

' O help me, dear angel, for pity, pity's sake,
My children have wept till their hearts are like to break.'
' The angels are fled and the sexton is sleeping,
And I am a devil, a devil from Hell.'

Gwyllim. Damn that girl ! I'd as soon keep a parrot,
Or a piping bullfinch. Sooner ; for their necks
Were easier wrung.
[With assumed mildness.] Come hither, Nelto bach.

[NELTO comes in.

Gwyllim [savagely]. I wish your neck was wrung !

Owain [aside]. Our dear Papa !

[NELTO returns to the adjoining room.

Gwyllim [to MRS. GWYLLIM]. What ! Are you crazed ? You rear yourself against me ?
You mean to strive with me ? Conspire and whisper
Your corner treasons ?—So, you Bedlamite,
You thought my lawyer cousin at Porth Davrarch—
I know you went there, I know everything—
Would turn against me, turn against a Gwyllim

For your sake? Fool, damned fool! We hate each other,
We Gwyllims, in the family; outside it
We fight for't, back to back. You've tried the Law,
And that won't touch me. Then you try the Church—
Poor Parson Jones. Ha, ha!

Nelto is singing:

'Then help me out, devil, O help me, good devil!'
'A price must be paid to a spirit of evil,
I am thinking what price,' said the spirit from Hell.

Gwyllim. Now, do you listen,
You white-mouthed staring block. The country-side
Knows all my devil's tricks, knows 'em and likes 'em.
I'm salt and pepper to their market talk;
Besides, I'm one of them. They know I'm master
Here in this house and brook no huswife mistress;
And every man wishes himself the same.
The poor man who loves drink and wenches likes me
For being no better than himself; the other
In his hypocrite heart likes me for being worse.
I point the road to Heaven by contraries,
And certify him safely on it o' Sundays,
When soaped and shaven, shining from his tea
And bound for Chapel, plump he meets Squire Gwyllim
Drunk as a lord and driving straight to Hell.

Hell! Let 'em scare each other white with it.
You, you're a stranger. Not a man among them
Would flick a curse across me for your sake;
No, not for your sweet sake, you withered hag,
Mother of half a score of brats, they would not.
And now such gilded glorious hopes of me
They have conceived, because each ship that passes
Drops gold into my lighthouse!

Nelto is singing:

'The price shall be paid, the bargain is made.'
She has sworn him an oath, the coffin is broken,
The poor mother runs up the stair.

Gwyllim. What d'ye mean?
Damn you, attend, you are my wife—my wife;
My thing, my chattel. You dare move against me?
By God, I am amazed! For twenty years
You play at suffering Patience, weep and pray,
Now—understand; you might as well be quiet.
I choose to keep you. I have married you,
I choose to keep you, Mrs. Gwyllim, keep
You and my lawful children.

Owain [aside]. Slave-driver!
Else might you lack a lawful slave to torture.

Gwyllim. Eh, hunchback? Did I hear you muttering there?

[To MRS. GWYLLIM]. I fathom you! That crooked impotence,
That infirm devil, first fruit of our love,
You make your minister. He sits to count
With seeming-aimless, calculating eye
Sea-traffickers; the huge East Indiaman
With level range of topsails, dancing peaks
Of snow-white schooners, giddier than girls,
And every drudging slave-black barge that crawls
Deep-laden down the coast—all, all of them
My tributaries.

[Pushes OWAIN'S chair away from the window.

Nelto is singing:

'You have sworn me an oath, but where are the pledges?'
'My hood of white satin with Valenciennes edges,
The ring from my finger, the rose from my hair.'
'No, no, no,
But a tress of your beautiful hair.'

Gwyllim. Well, enough of counting,
You count and whisper her: 'A twelvemonth more
And he'll be rich. Now is the time to strike;
Find the fool Judge, the snivelling Advocate
That shall unyoke you, force him to disgorge
Money for all, his gold for us to enjoy
And beard him with.'

Owain. What if my mother asked
Merely her money?
Gwyllim [striking him]. Misbegotten toad!
[To MRS. GWYLLIM.] So you inform my children, I their father
Owe you my fortune? This indeed's a wife!
Some women can be loyal, though not loving;
But that's not you.
What, all my fortune yours?
Salt harvest of those uncompanioned combs
Where podded sea-weeds welter; such a rent
As waves that leapt them for a wager paid,
Or the lean tenantry of long-necked birds
Blackening along their crests—yes, they were yours.
But the lighthouse yonder, sparkling on Craig y Gwr,
The eye, the gem of the isle—who planted that?
Who schemed and laboured, wore the highroads out,
Scraped, mortgaged half the estate—
Owain [aside]. My mother brought him.
Gwyllim. Curse you, what did you say?
Mrs. Gwyllim. No, do not, Owain.
You must be happier—at least less wretched
Than I, if money interests you.
Gwyllim. So!
There's the dumb devil out of you at last.
Poor devil! Quite a stranger in a woman,

And posting back to Hell. The chattering sort,
The scolding, whining fiends inhabit women.
Of those you've seven apiece.
Answer me now.
Come, find a tongue. You're growing lunatic,
As mad as your mad daughter.
Mrs. Gwyllim. 'Tis like I am.
Gwyllim. Trust me, you're sane enough—your brain will serve
To set a scheming accusation forth
With cunning words, when 'tis against your husband.
White, treacherous vermin! Ay, 'twas very well
You found no gullible fool, but Lawyer Gwyllim.
I'll punish you for this. Not now, good madam,
You grow too legal; but to-night, to-night,
You shall repent the lawyer, shall repent
The parson; most of all, repent your sons
You hound upon my money.
Nelto is singing:
'My penknife of pearl for a last love-token
I gave my sweet William; then, how can I shear it?'
'No need,' said the devil; 'no need. I can tear it.'
Gwyllim [to OWAIN]. As for you,
Pernicious fool, what's wealth to you? Can money
Put sap into those withered legs, give life
To you, who just exist? Come now, what would you
Buy with my money? Clothes? You'd set them off

Handsomely. Horses? You've no knees to grip 'em.
Drink? It would kill you. I can take my drink,
Three bottles, like a man. Would you buy Love?
'Tis saleable. Old, hideous men can buy it—
Not you. Why, damn you, miserable wretch,
What satisfaction could you buy?

Owain. Revenge.

[GWYLLIM laughs immoderately.]

Gwyllim. Revenge, he says. O excellent! Revenge!
A chip o' the old block yet! There's Gwyllim blood
Even in that poor carcase.
You must wait,
Young Master Gwyllim, say some thirty years.
Your grandsire lived to ninety; so shall I,
And hale and hearty too. So treasure up
Your petty wrongs, your venomous hunchback spites,
Till you have money. You'll have time to gather
A goodly store of festering injuries
Before you bury me.

Nelto sings:

In the dead of the night, the moon shining——

Gwyllim [looking into the adjoining room]. Shall I not be obeyed?
Silence, you screech-owl! Ah, Shonnin is there!
Come out, boy. Tell your mother she's a fool
To make you worry me for money.

Mrs. Gwyllim. I?

[SHONNIN comes in from adjoining room.

Shonnin. No, sir, 'twas not my mother. She knows nothing.

I only wanted—mother, I'm seventeen—
It's time I somehow went into the world.

Gwyllim. Well, go. Your brother Richard went at your age.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Ah, you forget——

Gwyllim. Dick was blown overboard?
No, I remember it. He chose to go.
Too weak to bear a buffet from my fist
Or put an old man down, he thought to outface
The hurricane, that plucks with giant hand
Men from the close-hugged mast, as I should pluck
A caterpillar from a stalk and toss it
Carelessly forth ; so does it fling them out
Amid the tumbling heaps of confused water
And the running foam. Useless to seek them there,
So never blame the captain.

Mrs. Gwyllim. May Heaven have mercy
On my poor—all of us !

Shonnin. Please hear me, sir.
Old Rhys the schoolmaster says—perhaps he has told you—
I am quick at books.

Gwyllim. Books!

Shonnin. There was a Scotchman staying with him not long ago, told me that at Edinburgh you can live for nothing, and get a University education so cheap the poorest people in Scotland send their sons there.

Gwyllim. The more fools they.

Shonnin. I should like to go there, sir.

Gwyllim. Well, go.

Shonnin. You don't mean——?

Gwyllim. To pay for you? No, my lad. When I've got money I shall have something better to do with it than to cram your soft head with book-learning. I never had more than the parson at Porth Davrarch could give me, and at your age I was earning my own living.

Shonnin. That's what I want to do.

Gwyllim. And what I mean you to do.

Shonnin. If you'd advance enough to keep me there, sir, till I could earn something by teaching, I'd pay you back, I would, upon my honour.

Gwyllim. Would you, upon your honour? I'm to advance money on the chance that when you get a wretched ushership you'll repay me. No, no, Master John, that girly pink and white of yours has made me half forget your age. It is high time you earned your own living, and as it happens I can find employment for you myself. Robert Roberts' son won't stay on the lighthouse with him, the young fool ; you shall take his place there to-morrow.

Mrs. Gwyllim.
Shonnin. } The lighthouse !

Gwyllim. Yes, sure, and a good place too. Don't I spend half the night there for my own pleasure often enough ?

Mrs. Gwyllim. Shonnin is to live there with Robert Roberts ?

Gwyllim. Yes, indeed, Mrs. Gwyllim, that he shall ; and only wish that your fair-haired booby may turn out half the man that Roberts is. He's seen some life, he has. There's no man I love a drink with better. He knows his business too well to be drunk at his post, but he can carry liquor enough to set a man-o'-war's crew reeling. An excellent fellow, Robert Roberts.

Owain [aside]. Excellent ex-pirate !

Shonnin. Pray, sir, don't try to send me to the lighthouse, for I warn you I shan't go.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Hush, Shonnin.

Owain. Bravo !

Gwyllim [divesting himself of his coat and laying a gold watch with seals on the table.] There's a rule in my family, John Gwyllim ; you mayn't have heard of it. When a son of mine is man enough to knock me down, I'll give him some money to go out into the world with, but not before. Try, now, try. It's true your brother Richard couldn't do it, though he had twice your chest; but that was two years ago. I'm past sixty now; getting an old man, you think. [Laughs and thrusts his fist into SHONNIN'S face.] Come, knock me down, I say, and I'll give you fifty, a hundred pounds to-morrow. If you can't, why I knock you down, and to-morrow you go to the lighthouse, or to the devil, as you damn please. Come on. Why don't you come on? I'm making no defence.

Shonnin. Mother?

Gwyllim. Leave her alone. Strike me, boy. I bid you do it.

Shonnin. Then I will; with all my might, and may God increase it!

Owain. There is no God.

[SHONNIN strikes his father.

Gwyllim [laughs]. Again, boy, again. I'll give you three times. [SHONNIN strikes him twice again.

Gwyllim. That's the best you can do, is it? And you call yourself a man and want my money. I'll show you the difference between you and a man. [Strikes SHONNIN, who falls, with his head against a piece of oak furniture. MRS. GWYLLIM rises, as though to go to him.] Go and pick up her baby boy, and kiss the place to make it well. [She sits down.] Am I never to have a man for a son? Well, indeed, I may have, but he'll be none of yours. As for this pretty thing [touching SHONNIN with his foot], it's plain he's your son; and plain too he's not mine.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Shame!

Gwyllim. Whose shame? It's just eighteen years since I first planned that lighthouse, and the young engineer, Ed——

Mrs. Gwyllim. Hush!

Gwyllim. So you don't like me to tell your children that Edward Liston was here eighteen years ago? [Putting on his coat.] Enough of this wrangling and jangling; I'll have no more of it. A pleasant thing truly, were I to be tied down to the company of an old withered shrewish wife and a pack of undutiful children. You, Shonnin, take the boat round to the bar for me when the tide serves. I shall go to the lighthouse this evening. Mrs. Gwyllim, bring me my supper in the library. Now mind, no damned treason while I'm away, or it'll be the worse for somebody.

[Goes out. NELTO comes in slowly, carrying the baby, and singing. While singing she puts it down in an oak cradle by the fire, and goes to the door by which GWYLLIM has gone out.]

Nelto sings:

In the dead of the night, the moon shining brightly,
From her tomb by the church the mother rose whitely.
By the bridge o'er the stream, up the path through the meadow,
Like a bird, like a gleam, through the wind, through the shadow,
She ran, while the devil looked out from her tomb.
He smiles 'twixt the cherubim faces and wings,
And winds her long hair round his finger for rings.
Boom! boom! boom!
From the tower in the silence there sounds the great bell.
'I am thinking what price,' said the devil from Hell.

Nelto. He's gone.

Owain. You're sure?

Nelto. I heard the stairs creak.

Owain. Look.

[She opens the door, looks out and shuts it again, making a sign that no one is there.

Mrs. Gwyllim. It was a lie, a foul remorseless lie,
And I accepted it. Children, 'tis false.
Will they believe him? On my soul he's mad.
You cannot think me such a castaway—
Children, you do not?

Nelto. Of course not, mother.

Shonnin. My dearest mother, no.

Owain. Well, for my part
I'm sorry 'tis not true. What, always faithful
To Caliban? O poor, poor, poor Miranda!

Mrs. Gwyllim. Owain? What do you say?

Nelto. 'Twas villainous
To wring a complete lie against yourself—

Mrs. Gwyllim. Not quite a lie; in saying that I wronged him;
I'll tell the entire truth. There was—I knew—
He spoke a name that once was dear to me.
'Twas a sad love and innocent of all
Save some few kisses and a world of tears.
The man I loved was married years ago;
Probably has forgotten me. One letter
I had of his, which in my foolishness
I wore upon my heart; and there he found it—
I mean your father. Well, God knows I've suffered.

Owain. Winged Ariel, fleeting Ariel I thought
Ever the one right lover for Miranda.
She should have spread milk-white transparent wings
And flitted with him to that delicate lair
I' the cowslip's bell.
O mother, pray forgive me!
If I talk lightly 'tis because I mean
You should not blush, for here indeed's no cause.

If there's a crime, a folly you should blush for,
'Tis to have married, loved then I suppose,
The monster we call father.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Loved him? I?
Alas! I never did. It's horrible
To speak such naked truths to you, our children;
I know, but cannot feel it, I'm degraded
By my much misery past proper feeling.

Owain. We never had it. Why should we pay toll
Of thought or speech to an injurious world
Which makes a slavery for us far profounder
Than that of slaves?

Nelto. They say that Love is blind.
If 'twas not Love, what other eyeless madness
On the wide earth could drive you—

Mrs. Gwyllim. Honour—Honour,
Blinder than Love and vacant as ribbed Death,
Honour, that heaven-white star which stoops from heaven
To play the Jack-o'-lantern—wayward Honour
And untoward Chance undid me. If much wrong
My grandsire did the Gwyllims, taking Ty Mawr,
It has been much avenged. I thought he loved me.
Oh, all might have been well, better than well,
Smooth as the ending of an old romance,
With sound of wedding-bells, and the ancient heirs

Come to their own again—but Gryffith Gwyllim
Played hero to it. Yet I thought he loved me.
Heaven be my witness I was not unworthy
Once to be loved : a young maid, innocent,
And fair beside. Out upon human folly,
Bids me remember beauty sorrow-changed !
As well some murdered ghost might make lament
The assassin stole a jewel.

Nelto. Had I beauty
And one defaced it, I should count that up
Among my bitterest wrongs.

Owain. Yet are there bitterer.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Much bitterer, Owain. You and I know that.

Nelto. O mother, think ! Have you not anywhere
Friends who would help us?

Mrs. Gwyllim. No. There's no one left.
I had so few. Mostly they're dead, and all
He in his cunning violence quarrelled with Past reconcilement. I have got no friends.

Owain. The net is closely meshed ; yet surely, surely,
Did I not lie here a chained prisoner,
I'd find the means to tear it.
You, John Gwyllim,
What are you good for? Have you no man's blood
In your body, laid there at your mother's knee,

To tingle at a blow, to shoot you upright—
As I shall never be—and make you swear
There shall be vengeance, shall be liberty
For her, for all of us?
I talk foolishly.

Shonnin. I'm ready to do anything. Just tell me
What I can do.

Owain. Oh, nothing, nothing, nothing!
Anne's practically dead, Richard is dead,
I have been dead—when was my birthday?—dead
These twenty years. Die; for it's your turn next.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Don't say that, Owain.

Nelto. No, you've left me out.
It's my turn next, and I don't mean to die;
At least not die before I've lived. To die!
Oh, 'tis a shocking thing to die, die young,
Be suddenly thrust on cold, remorseless Death—
Poor Dick! Don't think of it—

Mrs. Gwyllim. I needs must think,
Anne, Richard, Shonnin now—yes, all my children
As by some hungry monster, one by one
Are plucked from out my bosom. Owain is left,
My poor, poor Owain left.

[She approaches OWAIN, who motions her away.

Owain. I cannot bear it.
When others weep they've leave to hide their tears.

Grant me so much of manhood. Come, come, Nelto,
Take me away—alone—

[NELTO wheels his chair into the adjoining room.

Mrs. Gwyllim. O my dear Shonnin,
What fatal freak was this? My heart's a stone,
Or I'd be sorry for it. So you'll go,
You too. Why pull down fate upon your head?
Anne's in a mad-house; you'll be in a dungeon,
With Roberts for a gaoler.

Shonnin. Don't fear that.
I'm not going to the lighthouse.

Mrs. Gwyllim. So you say.
We all say that sometimes: 'I will' or 'will not.'
'Tis empty arrogance. When the whip cracks
The slave falls into line, and does or does not
Just as his master chooses.

Shonnin. No, not always.
You are a woman, mother; I'm a man.

Mrs. Gwyllim. At seventeen, my beloved?

Shonnin. Yes, from to-day.
My father's made me one.

Mrs. Gwyllim. A man, a man!
You must be more not to fear Gryffith Gwyllim.

Shonnin. And I do fear him; know he has the strength
To strike me dead, the will too, could he do it
And keep the wind of the law.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Mine's a worse fear.
I fear not death—why should I?—but I fear
Him because he's himself.

Shonnin. I've that fear, too.
Mother, a man may fear, but being a man
He catches Fear by the throat, and says, 'Not thou
But I am master.' So has this pale Fear
Been dragged by the hair through half the bloody mire
Of glorious battlefields, and died 'neath laurels.
Do not start, mother; I'll not dream of glory;
All that I ask is common liberty.

Mrs. Gwyllim. You can't resist him. He could carry you
Easily, like a child.

Shonnin. Yes, if he caught me,
But he shall never do it; my plans are laid.
I just tried first—it seemed incredible
To be grudged a pittance when I know he squanders
Money, your money—Oh, it's shameful!

Mrs. Gwyllim. Mine?
I think 'twas called so. Come, tell me your projects.

Shonnin. The captain of the 'Wave' sails from Porth Davrarch
For Liverpool to-morrow. 'Tis a promise
I sail aboard her.

Mrs. Gwyllim. What, you go to sea!

You be a sailor too, when even Richard—
Richard—For God's sake ! No, you shall not, Shonnin.
Listen ; I forbid you.
Shonnin. Why, so the Captain would.
He holds me cheap as you do. Mother mine,
My plans are different. I'll to Manchester ;
There, 'mid the flying shuttles and great wheels
That Fortune turns, to take my chance of Fortune.
Mrs. Gwyllim. My little Shonnin, he that loves his book,
A common mill-hand ?
Shonnin. Yes, and a scholar, too.
I shall live hard, save half my earnings, spend
Nothing on pleasure-seeking. So I'll save
Enough to go to Edinburgh.
Mrs. Gwyllim. No, never.
You never will. Why, it's the maddest plan.
You'll simply starve and die there, and your mother,
Your wretched mother won't even know you're dead.
Shonnin. Tell me a better plan.
Mrs. Gwyllim. She'll only guess it.
The're dreams enough to haunt the roaring nights
And bring ill tidings, when the dark's all voices ;
A clamour as of lamentable things
Climbing up from the shore and swooping seawards,
All clashing round Ty Mawr. Horrible voices,

Groans, sudden cries, and long, long doleful stories
The ear pursues, waiting the imminent words,
Until they whine and witter down to nothing.
Yet they're distinct enough. There's one that whispers,
Waving the ghost-white curtains. 'Hush! I've seen it.
It's hanging now deep down amid the seaweed.
It sways in the dim water like the seaweed,
The hair and long lax limbs; the tranquil fishes
Swim under, feed, and swim.' And that was Richard.

Shonnin. O mother, don't! Think he's in Heaven.

Mrs. Gwyllim. He may be.
He's drowned, at any rate. Another voice
Talks at the corner of the house. 'What! warm?
It's cold in the cell. Don't you remember her?
You used to hear her pitter-patter feet
On the passage floor, and open half awake
Your arms for the soft chill thing to creep into
And warm herself o' nights. It's cold in the cell.
I've seen her there. She's whimpering in the dark
Because she dares not scream. Her hair's cut short,
Her nails are grown. She's starved, unkempt, and ragged.
She has no mother.' That's my daughter Anne.

Shonnin. Mother, you are not yourself. These shocking fancies
Are themselves madness.

Mrs. Gwyllim. My lovely, delicate Anne!

Shonnin. 'Twas terror turned her brain—the daily terror
Of him. She's better far away, and doubtless
They're kind to her ; they surely must be kind
To your pretty Anne.

Mrs. Gwyllim. They may be ; but who knows ?
Shonnin, for my sake—see, I beg and pray you,
Don't leave me now. Indeed, I cannot bear it ;
I've borne so much. Shonnin, indeed, you know not
Just what you are to me. Dear, twice beloved ;
Dear child, and then—you'll never apprehend !—
My angel of consolation. Just one look,
One sinful look at that pure paradise
Some women walk in ; then the gate was closed.
The darkness and the anguish ! Then came you—
Flower of my soul ! You—son of very love ;
Because my heart was love, and all its blood,
Feeding your heart, fled through its thrilling pulses
In jubilant ministry ; for love is triumph
Even in the extreme of fate, and love is light
In death's gate and the darkness afterwards.
Well—that is past, long past. But you remain,
Flower of my heart. Shonnin my son, my best,
See how in my exceeding selfishness
I hang on you, implore, and supplicate
You will not, will not leave me.

Shonnin. My sweet mother,
What can I do? Consider; there's no choice.
I must escape, else be endungeoned yonder
At the lighthouse. Either way we're separated,
As well by one strait channel of stormy sea
As by a hundred miles.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Nay, not so far.
Sometimes you'd surely come. Oh, not so far,
For I should see your nightly vigilant flame
Through the dead hours when nothing seems alive
Except myself; see it through all the nights
I must keep watch to please his devilish humour.
Indeed, I want you there.

Shonnin. Mother, you are strange,
And different from yourself. You'd have me waste
My youth, my hopeful, all-containing youth
A vacant prisoner? Better to die.

Mrs. Gwyllim. A very little while; just a reprieve,
Then I'll have courage.

Shonnin. Courage, courage now!
You've had so much. Now comes the push of fate;
No other moment's good. Were I once captured Escape were mere conjecture. Now at most
'Tis hazard, and that favourable. Mother,
I will return, I never will forget.
Do I not love you? Ay, but you want help,

What help is here for any of us? Away,
I'll surely find it. Dearest soul, take heart.
I'll write—

Mrs. Gwyllim. What use? I never get my letters.

Shonnin. At least you'll guess I'm working for you.
Who knows?
I may discover sudden stairs to fortune
In Manchester. Men once as poor as I
Walk the streets now, their pockets stuffed with gold.
Think of that, mother.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Oh, I'll think of it!
Mad boy, upon my word you make me smile
Who cannot weep! You any fish-wife cheats,
If the market-women give you gillyflowers,
Just for your beaux yeux!
Ay, some men grow rich,
But you're not one of them. The man, my Shonnin,
Born to be rich, makes of such bones as yours
Grist for his mill.

[NELTO comes in from the adjoining room, leaving the door open.

Shonnin. Well, mother, laugh at me,
But let me go.

Nelto. Mother, indeed he must;
Go anyhow, go anywhere. You cannot Wish otherwise, I think.

Mrs. Gwyllim. No, I suppose not.
What can I find to wish? [Stands at the window.
How the tide eddies
Over the engulfed quicksand! I remember
Hearing of one who blundered on it by chance,
Taking it for firm land. He stood quite still Shrieking for help; began to sink and struggled
Sank all the faster, so was quiet again,
Yet sank and shrieked and sank, then one wild horror
Of choking cries and battling arms, then nothing
To see but bubbles. The island's all one quicksand.
I sink, and sink—and live.

Nelto. And while there's life
There's hope, too.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Hope?

Shonnin. I swear you shall have succour
If I'm alive. If not, I'm but your raven;
Out of your flock some bird of happier wing
Shall fly to fetch you comfort. Dearest mother,
Patience till then; wait you in patience, sister,
Your brothers won't forget.

Nelto. How wait in patience?
I doubt I've not a genius for it. Wait?
Had you said 'Fly!'

Shonnin. You'd be the very bird
Were you a boy.

Nelto. Sometimes a girl has wings.

Shonnin. A husband finds them for her. Find the husband.

Nelto. On Ynys yr Unigdra?

Mrs. Gwyllim. 'Tis impossible.
My daughters cannot marry. No honest men
Come to Ty Mawr.

Nelto. Is there no way but marriage?

Mrs. Gwyllim. Would that there were, my love! Alas, what other?
I fear you are too ignorant, too untaught
In the world's ways to teach. You've hands to scrub,
Yet none, I think, would use you for a servant,
Except your father.

Nelto. Mother, do you mean
That I'm to wither out my whole sweet youth
Here at Ty Mawr, waiting while indolent Fortune
Shuffles my brother's cards? Oh, never, never!
There's Lucy growing tall, there's little Gwen;
They can supply my place. They're young, they've time;
But I'm eighteen, next year nineteen, and next
Out of my teens. O mother, one grows old
So terribly soon, and youth—youth's all we've got,
We women! Don't you see I must go?

Shonnin. Where ?
How can you go ?
Mrs. Gwyllim. I would to God you could.
Have I not beat my brains a million times
Seeking some way for you ?
Nelto. But I have found it.
I might have gone last May. If he returns—
He swore he should return——
Mrs. Gwyllim. Who is this he ?
No gentleman, for never such comes hither.
Surely my Nelto has not given her heart——
Nelto. To a drunken quarryman, a scheming clerk,
Or any other Williams, Parry, or Jones
Foots this delectable island. No, my heart,
My heart's my own. Yet, 'tis a luxury
I can't afford.
Shonnin. Mother, don't waste your terrors.
Nelto fools seriously, yet never could be
Too serious to fool.
Nelto. Do you know this song ?

[Sings] Winged Love's a rover,
Where'er he may fly,
Young hearts must follow ;
Then kiss me good-bye.

Fleet Love, O sweet Love,
He came but for this—
Greeting and parting,
A smile and a kiss.

Shonnin. Why, the sailors sang it to death aboard the Italian ship that anchored in the bay last Spring. What of it?

Nelto. Do you remember meeting the sailors as we were coming from church one Sunday?

Shonnin. Yes, very well. They were bursting with admiration of our Nelto's beauty.

Nelto. And you were all bursting with laughter at their admiration. It was no laughing matter for me, though. Why, before that I had always believed you when you said I was ugly, for there's no true mirror but other people's eyes. However, the Captain was not there that day.

Mrs. Gwyllim. The Captain? What of him? Where did you meet him?

Nelto. On the shore. Not very often, but often enough.

Mrs. Gwyllim. What sort of man is he? Did he make you an offer?

Nelto. He is—handsome, I suppose. He offered—to take me away with him. You see, mother, he'd never seen Anne, and foreigners' notions of beauty must be different from ours. He said I was too fine a girl and sang too sweetly to be buried alive in this horrible country.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Did he offer you marriage?

Nelto. He did not mention it. He told me he adored me, and that Italy was beautiful as Paradise.

Mrs. Gwyllim. But you did not go. Thank God for that!

Nelto. I liked him at first. I should have gone if he had not made love to me; that was intolerable. But, mother, other things become still more intolerable. If he comes again I shall go.

Mrs. Gwyllim. My child, for God's sake, hush! You don't know what you're talking about.

Nelto. I know. It means dishonour. Books tell one that.

Mrs. Gwyllim. My innocent child, my poor unhappy Nelto! You do not, do not know. Books cannot tell you—but enough of this. Your ignorance, your wretched home excuse you. My sweet child, you must promise me to put quite away from your mind this shocking memory, this—— Promise me.

Nelto. And if I promise you that, what can you promise me? Life, mother, life; or a kind of deadly existence, without the blessing of a grave? Could I choose any lot for myself more miserable than the lot you chose for yourself?

Shonnin. Shame, Nelto ! My mother gave up all for honour, and you would give up honour.

Nelto. A slave can have no honour.

Shonnin. If ever your damnable foreigner comes this way again, I'll——

Mrs. Gwyllim. Hush, Shonnin ; let us hear no more on the subject. And Nelto will promise me [putting her hands on Nelto's shoulders], Nelto, you will promise me by all that's holy to forget——

Nelto. Never to forget you, my own, own mother. I'll promise nothing more.

[The mother and daughter look at each other silently. Then MRS. GWYLLIM looses NELTO slowly, and, falling on her knees by the table, buries her face in her hands.]

Mrs. Gwyllim. O merciful God !
How often have I prayed ; 'Look on our sufferings ;
See, Lord, our mortal griefs.' Thou wouldst not hear me.
Now must I pray ; 'Look Thou upon our sins.'
We are left too long in hell, our hearts grow hellish,
Immortal wrongs are heaped upon our souls.
See ; we grow wicked one by one ; I first,
Owain, this girl—we shudder at ourselves.
Save us, good Lord ! Have mercy on their souls,
Mercy——[Her voice fails in sobs. SHONNIN and NELTO throw their arms round her.]

SCENE III

The inner room. Two windows look out to sea, one across the bay to distant mountains. OWAIN in his chair, NELTO mending clothes by the window.

Nelto [singing].

Sleep we must, but when to slumber?
Every hour's too fair to choose it,
Morn of gold and eve of umber,
Silver night—Ah, who would lose it?
Honey's hid in every flow'r,
Joy in every sweet, sweet hour.

Sleep we shall, but first be weary,
Dance with hours of morning gladness,
Pillage noon nor chide the dreary
Hours that weave delightful madness,
Round the earth that's with us racing,
Sun and moon and meteors chasing;
Worn with journeys, white with dust,
Then we'll sleep—for sleep we must.

Owain. The boisterous Winter's long outstayed his term.

See how the powdered snow pricks out the lean
Anatomy of the hills, their toothed spines
And skeleton ribs ; colourless, lifeless, old,
Old as the hills.

Nelto. April—and then comes May.

Owain. I warrant the inheriting Spring blows a brave horn
Somewhere through flush green fields and sprinkled woods.
Stark Winter holds him out. Fierce cecity
Of the grey tyrant ! There's his grip on us
So long endured he thinks it must endure.
Madman ! 'Tis certain he must loose at last,
Then why not now ? 'Tis certain he must die ;
Let him die now—or live for ever.

Nelto. To-day
I took my summer clothes out of the closet ;
They're all blue mould.

Owain. What else do you expect ?
Everything moulders at Ty Mawr, ourselves Included.

Shonnin [coming in]. Nelto, will you make my bundle ?
The 'Wave' goes out on the ebb to-morrow morning,
And I with her.

Nelto. But, O unlucky day !
The fishermen's boats from the other side the island
Are sailing out—see, one, two, three black sails.
Old Williams knocked a hole yesterday night
In our smaller boat ; so now on all Unigdra
There's just one craft, and that the one my father
Will take to Craig y Gwr.

Owain. What ? What do you say ?
The fishermen gone ? No other boats ?

Shonnin. That's bad.
I dare not meet my father. Will you go
To the bar to-night, then bring the boat to harbour ?
I will be there. Pray Heaven he may return
From the lighthouse early ! I must speed to gain
The port in time.

Nelto. O you are fleet enough !
Yes, you must go. But is it farewell for ever,
Old Shonnin ?

Shonnin. No, believe me I'll return.

Owain. When ?

Shonnin. When I have gained the power to help you.

Owain. Ah !

Shonnin. Come, Owain, man, wish me good luck for all.
I mayn't succeed, but if I fail, by Heaven
It shall not be because this Hell behind me,

Wherein you sit and suffer, 's unremembered.
Would it were you might make the attempt, not I !
But you being hindered, why the adventure's mine,
And God will surely—

Owain. Help. Ay, cry aloud !
Perchance the Almighty sleeps or He pursues
Some maned star, leaping prodigiously
Forth from a lair of suns. I'm sick of God.

Shonnin. Ill-omened words. Find better, as you love me—
I think you do—to speed me on this road.
Owain, your hand. I would you saw my heart ;
It cannot find the words. I know I know not
Half what you suffer. To mitigate your pain,
To save my mother, Nelto, all from bondage
In grey Ty Mawr, I'd give—what would I not ?
I'd give my heart, my life—

Owain. Would you give your soul ?

Shonnin. What do you mean ?

Owain. I mean that if my soul
Had legs to carry it, it should this night
Have rushed upon damnation. That for her sake,
Yours, mine, everyone's sake.

Shonnin [to NELTO]. What does he mean ?

Nelto. I cannot guess. Owain, how pale you look !
Shall we not leave you ? Will you sleep ?

Owain. For ever,
If so I could. Why did I say damnation?
The thing's a fraud; yet were it otherwise
I would encounter it. I say if I could walk,
Stand but six hours, reach anyhow the means,
Knife, bullet, poison—I would kill my father
Like a mad dog.

Shonnin. Hush, Owain, you would not.

Owain. I say I would. A dangerous lunatic!
His wickedness amounts to madness. She,
Our mother, holds him mad. Well, shut him up.

Nelto. No one would do it. Sober, yes or drunk,
He's sane enough in business.

Owain. Sane enough
In the head but mad at heart. No, yet not so;
Such madness mounts. He cannot estimate
Debit and credit here. He overdraws;
That's some men's mania. Were it but his money
He fancied inexhaustible, why then
They'd clap him in a cell with no more scruple
Than his poor victim Anne. But on human souls
He draws, on flesh and blood. The coward world
Protects such madmen, the obsequious Priest
Sets bogies up to fright into submission
Their recalcitrant slaves; God—His mysterious Will.
I have a God, a God to whom I appeal

Unawed, an essence above all modes, an element
Not to be dissolved in the limbec—I mean Justice.

Shonnin. Justice is my God too, for God is Justice,
And therefore—O, have done with argument!
Let devils argue on Free-will and Fate;
Fools on the ten commandments. You mean nothing,
I know, by talk like this, Nelto means nothing
By talk about the foreign fellow.

Nelto. I mean
Just what I said.

Owain. What now? What have you said?
Again the Italian? And you'll go? No, sister,
Not to dishonour. Think, you have a mother
To die of your disgrace.

Nelto. She cannot die.
She's cursed to live, and who may comfort her?
Owain, there's a mad hurry in my veins—
My father's blood—to-day 'tis mirth and music,
To-morrow 'tis what time and misery make it.
Oh, there's no comfort in me! Let me go;
I were better gone.

Owain. Shonnin, do you hear that?
How many years, supposing you successful,
Must this beleaguered city of souls hold out
Before there's hope of succour? Say, ten years,

Ten at the soonest. Why, that's far too late.
Mother'll be dead, Nelto be lost, dishonoured.

Shonnin. No ; I will not believe it.

Owain. Your beliefs
Are comfortable. David in ten years—
Where will he be ? Lucy's a patient creature ;
She'll wait and wait and wait, till she's transformed
From flesh to dull grey marble. For myself,
You may say to-morrow were too late, to-day
Alike too late. Yet even I have claims
Can righteously demand scope, satisfaction
For the intellectual being, sole surviving
Of all that should be life, that might have been Abundant life, in this foul half-animate
Mis-shapen body. Look on me, John Gwyllim,
And ask yourself, what has this monster done—
Steeped in a woman's tears, red from the winepress
Of warm out-trampled hearts, what has he done
That he should live, and live to be the ruin,
The horror and despair of unhelped creatures
Crude Law and shameless Nature yield him ?

Shonnin. Nothing ;
But then I have done nothing to deserve
To be made a parricide.

Owain. What do you fear ?
Night after night, or morning after morning—

That varying hour's just his malignant way
To keep my mother watching, some one waiting
Sleepless upon the shore—night after night
I hear him stumbling up the stair half drunk,
Three-quarters drunk, and then I ask myself,
Does God work miracles, that this drunken man,
Walking yon dangerous shore, never mistakes?
Never sets foot upon that bottomless quicksand,
Which should he tread it—well, there were an end.
And the clear morn, lifting long lids of cloud
Over the sea, would laugh on a clean world.

Shonnin. Consider no such accident. The lamp
My mother trims in the casement is most visible
Even from the wet edge of the lowest tide.
The stretched sands the further side the river
Are solid enough, for all they look as slopped,
As slimy with the salt and slippery weed
As the hither perilous shore. The lantern waits him
Always on the bar, that side the river's mouth.
The bar! What boisterous shivering nights I've paced it!
Lain, too, in summer, under a yellow moon,
Soft on the fine sand, gathering small pink shells
Like sea-nymphs' finger nails. No more of that.
David must—

Owain. Do you think the lantern guides him
When he steers homewards?

Shonnin. That doubtless, and the lamp
High in Ty Mawr.

Owain. It were an easy thing—
And easier yet to close that single eye
Of light in dark Ty Mawr—an easy thing
To let your flitting lantern leap the river
And stop this side. If he should land this side,
Were it not dangerous, mortal dangerous?
The quicksand would say nothing.

Shonnin. Horrible!
How dare you, Owain, even in imagination
Caress these murderous—but I'm very simple
To take you seriously! When I turn murderer
I'll devise something rare. Your plan's absurd, Impracticable.

Owain. Why impracticable?
Nothing of note was ever practicable
Till it was done. He who vouchsafes not Fortune
Her part in his game, has Fortune for his foe.
Pshaw! 'Tis beside the mark, since you are purposed
In your most sanctified selfishness to depart
Leaving us in our quicksand.

Shonnin. What I purpose
You are informed. This shall not be farewell,
Yet I were best begone. Did the master see me,
Who knows, this very night I were impounded
In the lighthouse? David must bring round the boat.

Nelto. I'll meet it on its return.

Shonnin. Thanks. That were best.
You have often been before ; he'll notice nothing.

[Goes out.

Owain. Shonnin, one moment, stay. He'll not, he's gone—
And still so much to urge ! I wanted judgement,
I was too violent. Yet an angel's tongue
Had not persuaded him. I might have touched
At least upon the difference, all the difference,
'Twould make to him. Oh, he would never heed !
Yet Nelto, you, I, anyone that knows
The metal of his mind, cannot expect
Success for him in a machine-made world,
Where men perforce work like machinery
Grinding against each other. He wants learning ;
The temperate atmosphere, the cloistered calm
Where learning flowers, were native to him.

Nelto. You know
Schoolmaster says were he but given the chance
He would achieve distinction.

Owain. Go, impress that—

Nelto. I cannot—and 'twere useless.

Owain. Right. At least
He will have freedom, he has hope. My Nelto,
This stiff-necked righteousness 'doth something smack,

Doth something grow to' common selfishness.
Sooner than wear a stain, an importune
Discomfortable stain upon his soul,
He'll heave us to perdition. But consider,
Prejudice apart, how stands the real account?
This modern minotaur, half brute, half tyrant,
Who stands convicted out of his own mouth
Of devilish cruelties to man, beast, ay
To wife and children, whom he maims and tortures
For pleasure; this mean plunderer of a woman,
This — what in every answering nerve you know him—
Society protects. Society
That strings up starved wretches by the score
For paltry thefts, sends by the waggon-load
Poor whimpering boys and girls to load the gallows
With puny bones. Does the judge dream o' nights?
Does the worm Conscience wither in his bloom
The purple juryman? No; yet if one should rid
The earth of this notorious old mad villain,
He were deemed blood-guilty. Did I do the deed
'Twould leave a snaky something in my soul
Not to be reasoned with, a venomous head
To stir and threat i' the dark; yet—yet I'd do it,
And do it again. Once for the immediate good,
Twice for bare Justice, thrice for my revenge.

Revenge, revenge ! He, he 'twas huddled up
All appetites, all aims into that span,
Pressed in and welded them. What ! flesh and blood
Turn to hard steel ? Ay, that's your chemistry.
Wake Nelto ! Have I reasoned you to sleep,
Or are you praying for deliverance ? Wake,
Either way. Let us read. Find me the book
Of the wise Verulam, where he speaks well
About Revenge.

Nelto. Owain, of all our lives
Whose is the worst ? Whose the least valuable ?

Owain. Mine.

Nelto. But mine next.

Owain. Why yours ?

Nelto. Look at it, brother.
I do sometimes, and all's far too distinct,
Like the long coast before the rain— bare, cheerless,
Monotonous year, following monotonous year,
Myself at end of them, a body and soul
Too withered even for pity.

Owain. Yes—yes—yes.

Nelto. Well, I can't bear it. I choose exile, shame,
I know not what I choose, but 'tis life, life,
Not living burial. Yet I fear 'tis ugly
And miserable. O why mayn't one be happy ?
Owain, are you sure I never shall be happy ?

Owain. Sure.

Nelto. I want to be so much.

Owain. You cannot be.

A sailor's strumpet, flung at the first port
Into—Good God!

Nelto. So little makes me glad.

Fresh flowers, ripe strawberries, the first fine day
Set my blood capering. There in the brown dusk,
Under the orange moon, out of dim warmth
Music will flutter and fall, a crowded thrumming
Of mellow strings, laughter o'ertakes; the curve
Of the marbled quays and palaces hangs hushed
In a translucency, half sky, half sea.
The stars drown under them. Shall I not sing
To such music, laugh in such a—

Owain. You may laugh.

You'll not be happy.

Nelto. Shall I not? Why not?

Owain. Shame, horror of yourself, the strong remembrance
Of your mother, all your heart clings to—

Nelto. I know it.

To what will you drive me?

[She goes to the bookshelf and passes her hand along the books, as though looking for one. Presently begins singing to herself:

O wind that farest
Afar and barest
Beyond the streaming
Of storms the gleaming
Of one red star.
[Takes down a book and opens it.

Whichever way accursed?
[Turns the leaves slowly, singing:

Beyond the streaming
Of storms the gleaming—
The strong wind caught it,
The wild wind brought it
Out through the thunder
Of surf and under—]
[Flings the book on to the table.

Owain, I will do it.

Owain. You will do what?

Nelto. The thing you would have done.

Owain. Who asked you? Who?
Who set that in your book? Not I—not I!
There are many things I would have done. Be plain.
What do you mean?

Nelto. I mean the thing you mean.

Owain. Him? To— to—?

Nelto. Ay.

Owain. You'll swear that?

Nelto. I will do it.

Owain. By God, you'll not. You're jesting.

Nelto. Jesting? I?
Look at me, Owain.

Owain. Brave, splendid sister!
You'll do it. But no, by Heaven, you shall not dare!
You are a girl. No! Never drag this horror
Down to the eternal mansion of your soul.
'Twould take a man to bed with that o' nights
And say, 'We'll sleep:' to taste that in his meat
And still be hungry. If this deed be done
Let a man do it.

Nelto. Who? Where is the man?

Owain. David—or Lewis—

Nelto. Children! Shall we all wait?
David a fool too.

Owain. O that I were a man!

Nelto. You are and are not. Accept necessity,
And with few words.

Owain. It is not in the act.
'Twere easily accomplished—

Nelto. Show me how.

Owain. 'Tis the ugly horror climbing out of it.

Nelto. Let's to the core of the matter.
Here's my life,
Yourself have shown how ineluctably set
To misery and despair. Shall I for nothing
Endure much evil, or for sufficient cause,
And benefits arising?

Owain. Consider, Nelto—

Nelto. Enough considered. Here's your instrument:
Use it or lose it. What! Do you think that I—
I do not hate him too?

Owain. O rarely, rarely!

Nelto. How is the moon to-night?

Owain. At one o'clock
She's down. At three the tide sweeps round the bar.
Whoop over! Then you know in a trice it's up
Across the level.

Nelto. Well?

Owain. The shrimp-fishers
From the long sands the further side the stream
Sometimes, at slack tide, wade across the bar
At the river's mouth.

Nelto. It can be done.

Owain. 'Tis venturesome:
For should they linger till half tide they're caught.
They cannot cross again?

Nelto. If they're strong swimmers.

Owain. He cannot swim. A quicksand cuts them off
From shore, and the sea mounts upon the bar.

[The door leading into the adjoining room moves slightly.

Nelto. Ah! What's that?

Owain. Nothing. The door creaked.

Nelto. Is it open?

Owain. It was left ajar.

[NELTO, who is kneeling by his chair, half rises.

No, no—
The room is empty. Listen, Nelto. The bar
Runs level either side the river mouth,
The same straight sand, the same tide-trampled rocks
Bank from the sea. Might not a sober man,
Steering for an accustomed light—eh, sister?—
On a so cloud-enmeshed and wolf-dark planet
As ours will be ere morn—a sober man
Land on the dangerous side, and not discover
His error till too late? That is supposing
The light misplaced. To-night you carry it?

Nelto. Yes. He will not be sober.

Owain. Can you wade
Across the river?

Nelto. I have done it for sport.

Owain. What is to fear, should he discover in time,
But blows and curses? We get those every day
For nothing.

Nelto. What should I say?

Owain. Make an excuse.

Nelto. A lie?

Owain. Of course.

Nelto. I cannot.

Owain. Ah! you stick at lying?

Nelto. 'Twould be ridiculous. But what to say?
I have no invention for excuses.

Owain. Say
You wearied waiting for him. Don't we all know
Patience is not your gift? Say that you waded
Across the river for sport, and, the tide rising,
Return became impossible. It will be.
Think of that, Nelto.

Nelto. I am not afraid.
He'll come about half tide. But if all goes well,
If he should land observing nothing—?

Owain. Let him.
When he's ashore, then quick into the boat,
Push out, push out for your life; don't look or listen;
Land where you will, and let the boat drift. Then Come home. The quicksand covers all.

Nelto. If he—

Owain. In twenty paces he's in it, and, if not—
The vigilant tide will see to it.

Nelto. Horrible!

Owain. Ay, this may wear the loathed mask of murder:
Remember, it is Justice. 'Tis despair
For one man, brief despair, for the rest long hope.

Nelto. Yes ; but I—Oh, I'll go and perish with him!
I could not live to dream of it.

Owain. You die?

Nelto. Yes, I had rather.

Owain. But you shall not, Nelto ;
Not without me. Mine be the expiation,
If death be so. No, life be arbitrator,
Condemn or justify. Sister, unurged
Of me beat round the compass of this question.
When you decide, why, let it be decision,
Not inclination. Meanwhile our grand accomplice
Steals greyly down the shore.
Bring me his watch ;
It lies on the parlour-table. I'll reset it
Slow by a quarter, so there'll be less hazard
Of his return while the river's fordable.
Thus I, the first, move in our enterprise,
And thus will seal with devout hands a compact
That must attend your hand. The sin be mine
And the repentless sea's.
Bring me the watch.

[NELTO opens the door into the next room, and sees MRS. GWYLLIM there.

Nelto. Ah ! Mother !

Mrs. Gwyllim. The watch—give me the watch.

Nelto. The—the watch ?

Mrs. Gwyllim. Your father's. He sent me for it.

Nelto. [Pointing to the table.] It is there. [Touching MRS. GWYLLIM'S hand.] What's that. You've blood on your hand.

Owain. [Calling.] Bring me the watch.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Does it still bleed ? His food was not to his liking.
He broke his glass on my hand.

Nelto. Yes, Owain. [Taking up the watch.

Mrs. Gwyllim. [Catching her hand.] No—let me have it. [GWYLLIM is heard shouting below stairs.

Owain. Quick !

Nelto. Mother, for Shonnin's sake—

Owain. We must delay him.

[MRS. GWYLLIM lets NELTO pass through to OWAIN.

Owain. All explanations after. Damn the key !

[Setting back the hands and reclosing it.
So, Nelto ! There's my seal set to the bond.

[GWYLLIM comes in.

Gwyllim. You devil's drab, bring me my watch, I say !
My watch ! Look at the tide, you bat-eyed fool.
It's down from the bar. When it's below the rocks

No getting aboard dry-shod.
[To OWAIN who holds up the watch.] You've my watch?
Curse you, how dare you touch it?

Owain. I've used it, sir.
Only to seal a—something, like a Gwyllim.

Gwyllim. Letters? Who dares have letters in my house,
Except myself? I will not pay hard money
For senseless trash. I loathe your modern nonsense,
Newspapers and letters. I had none of them
When I was a boy.

Owain. To whom, sir, should I write?
Or who to me? This matter which I sealed
Was but a trifling jest, a bond for sport
'Twixt Nelto and myself.

Gwyllim. [Putting on his watch.] I must be off.
But look you, Owain, you devil, I mislike you.
You stuff your brain with books. The doddering fool
That owned Ty Mawr before, left you too many.
Bess shall make fuel of them.
Mrs. Gwyllim,
Your girl's dismissed. I'll have no maid who talks
Against her master. I've engaged Bess Owen
The hawker's daughter: she's the buxom fresh
Free-smiling lass for me. Sit up till I come,
Keep the lamp trimmed and have a foot-bath ready,

And the water warm. If you were fresh and buxom,
Not sallow, thin, hagged past the years you bear,
I would not spoil your bloom with nights of vigil.
Such service now befits you.
Let Shonnin come
By moonset to the bar, and take the boat
As usual to her moorings. Why do you stare
All of you on me? What's there strange in me?
One would suppose you—well, 'tis no great matter
If you do hate. A nest of unfanged serpents!
[Turns to go out. To MRS. GWYLLIM.] Follow me, you.

Nelto. [To OWAIN.] I too have sealed the bond.

SCENE IV

Night. A high wooden footbridge over the river. A long stretch of wet sand goes down to the sea. Beyond the distant fire of the lighthouse shows red. NELTO comes towards the bridge from Ty Mawr, carrying an unlighted lantern.

Nelto. Not to be thought of—think of anything else. Think Gabriello's waiting on the bridge.

[Sings] Young hearts must follow
Where'er he may fly;
Ladylove, light-o'-love,
Kiss me good-bye.

What a smile he'll flash upon me! Radiant. Bah! I hate hot lips on my neck.

[Sings] Love comes and goes,
Hither and thither he flies,
Sleeps here in a rose,
Wakes there in your eyes.

Could I love no one?
Somewhere to-night on this wide unknown earth,

That seems to heave with the innumerous breathing
Of her stilled inhabitant swarm, somewhere—No, never!
Farewell, lost love, for, oh, this night ends all,
Ere ever 'tis begun!
[Climbing the steps of the bridge.] Down slips the moon.
Broken and tarnished too? Now she hangs motionless
As 'twere amazed, in a silver strait of sky
Between the long black cloud and the long black sea;
The sea crawls like a snake.

[Sings]
In the dead of the night the children were weeping,
The mother heard that—
[Catches sight of a seated figure on the top of the steps.
A woman on the bridge?
My God! Who? Who? What does she here at this hour?
To turn were—No, by Heaven, I will not turn!

Mrs. Gwyllim. [On the top of the steps. Rising.] Ellen?

Nelto. [Coming to the top of the steps.] Mother! What are you doing here?

Mrs. Gwyllim. What are you doing?

Nelto. Hurrying to meet the boat,
Pray let me pass.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Why does not Shonnin go?
Is this girl's work?

Nelto. You know I often do it.
I am full as strong as he is.
Mrs. Gwyllim. Yet I say,
You shall not.
Nelto. Mother, you speak very strangely.
This trouble about Shonnin—
Mrs. Gwyllim. Where's your lantern?
Perfectly dark? Why, girl, you ought to know
This is a dangerous shore.
Nelto. There's light enough.
Mother, go home. You've nothing on your head.
The uncivil wind scatters your silver hair
Like a lone cloud fleecing above the moon.
You should return. Think, Shonnin goes to night,
May even be gone. Bid him farewell.
Mrs. Gwyllim. No farewells.
I've had too many of them. He is not going.
[Holding up a key.] His bedroom door is fast.
Nelto. Ah! That's well thought of,
Very well done. But, mother, now you've told me,
Pray hasten home. The moon stoops to the sea,
I hear the mounting surge. Haste—let me go.
Why do you hold me?
Mrs. Gwyllim. Is your lamp well trimmed
In the lantern?
Nelto. Why delay me?

Mrs. Gwyllim. I do not.
I stop you.

Nelto. For God's sake! This is madness.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Give me that lantern. What! am I not your mother?
Shall I not be obeyed? Give me the lantern,
And go you home. I mean myself to meet
The boat to-night.
Yes, Nelto, I do know.
I am an eavesdropper—that's how I know it.

Nelto. You do? You mean to thwart us? Fatal, fond,
Unhappy woman! Ay, you will do nothing
Yourself to save yourself, to save your children!
We must all die to please you, go to Bedlam,
Be trodden in the mire—

Mrs. Gwyllim. Child, you are wrong.

Nelto. Pardon me, mother—Oh, forgive me, mother—
But in this purposed business of mine,
Which is wise, equitable, the only Justice
We are like to obtain, why will you thwart me? Go,
Go home, forget, be innocent—

Mrs. Gwyllim. To you
I say those words: my Ellen must be innocent.
The crime, if the imagination be a crime,
Is Owain's; I cannot clear him. The execution
Shall be mine only.

Nelto. Yours, mother? You?

Mrs. Gwyllim. Yes. I surprise you, like an unknown creature
Splitting from out a dry familiar shape.
I do surprise myself, for I am free;
The husk has split, out darts a winged life
And leaps on the wind. When I went forth to-night
I was yet undetermined. Girl, behold me!
Am I not changed? All's fallen from me now
But naked motherhood. What! Shall a hare
Turn on the red-jawed dogs, being a mother,
The unpitying lioness suckle her whelps
Smeared with her heart's blood, this one law be stamped
For ever on the imperishable stuff
Of our mortality, and I, I only
Forbidden to obey it? A bitter curse
Light on me if I do not. Give me the lantern.
I must save my children.

Nelto [embracing her]. Well said, oh, most well,
Dear mother! I must not weep. Pray you forgive me.
Yet do not intervene; make me your instrument.
Consider, all hangs on his not observing
The least unusual circumstance. Your presence
Sobers him, even by the unnatural hate
He bears towards you, and thrust thus strangely on him,
'Twould prick his observation.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Alas ! that's true.

Nelto. O me, your small soft arms ! In mine the muscles
Leap like a man's. When have you handled boats ?
Ours is a heavy one, and the gusty wind
Drives dead on shore. But 'twill be necessary
To push out immediately, lest he discover
The trap ere he's well in. You cannot do it.

Mrs. Gwyllim. What matter if I fail ? I shall but perish,
'Tis simple.

Nelto. No, your failure means our failure.
Never again could we attempt this business,
Once having failed. And mother, my dear mother,
Your children cannot lose you. Think of Owain,
Your little ones left to the hawker's girl
And her base kind.

Mrs. Gwyllim. You torture me—

Nelto. I speak truth.
Mine is the undertaking, or 'twere best
To abandon it. Resolve, ere the moon's rim
Grazes the sea.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Ellen, you are too young ;
You should be innocent—

Nelto. Never again
After this night. Come, mother, I am yours ;
Make me a wanton or an avenger.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Powers
That set my spirit to swing on such a thread
Over mere blackness, teach me now to guide it !
Nelto. Mother, the moon dips.
Mrs. Gwyllim. Go, my daughter, go !
And let these hands, these miserable hands,
Too weak to avenge my children, let them be
Yet strong enough to pull upon my head
God's everlasting judgement. All that weight
Fall on me only !
Nelto. Amen, so let it be,
If so it may be.
Mrs. Gwyllim. Farewell.
Nelto. I'd forgotten
Something of urgency. Haste to extinguish
The lamp in the parlour window, lest it guide him
Too well in the dark.
Mrs. Gwyllim. Better, I think, rekindle it
In the granary dormer.
Nelto. Good. To shift the light
About that distance, should serve very well
Our purpose.
Mrs. Gwyllim. Hence, and may the black Heaven shield you !

[Goes away in the direction of Ty Mawr, while NELTO descends the steps on the further side.

Nelto [sings].

In the dead of the night, the moon shining brightly,
From her tomb by the church——

What's all that red
Awash on the oozed sand? Fool! 'Tis reflection
From the lighthouse fire. What! Is it different
To-night?

[Sings]

By the bridge o'er the stream, by the path up the meadow,
Like a bird, like a gleam, thro' the wind, thro' the shadow——

If he should scream out horribly?
I must hear and never help. O God! I could not,
I must return. I must——

[Sings] Boom, boom, boom!
From the tower in the silence there sounds the great bell.

Plumb drops the moon!
Drown not so fast! Wait for me—wait awhile.
[Runs down the sands towards the sea.

SCENE V

Night. The inner room. OWAIN in his chair at the window looking towards the sea. His mother beside him. The curtains are drawn back and there is no light in the room except a candle on the ground.

Mrs. Gwyllim. She'll be drowned.
Owain. Not so. She cannot be.
Mrs Gwyllim. Cannot?
He does not come. She's waiting all this while,
And the tide storming up. Oh, but this darkness!
Is that foam at the river's mouth? I'm sure by now
Great rushing surges rise like sheeted phantoms
Momently from the headland. But one sees nothing.
Owain. Enough; the lighthouse—
Mrs. Gwyllim. Ay, that glares at us.
Owain. And yon small stationary light—
Mrs. Gwyllim. So small!
What if he overlooked it? Landed there,
At the usual place? She's lost so.
Owain. No, no, mother!

Shall we not mark him? Shonnin must run down
And fetch her off with the boat.

Mrs. Gwyllim. But tell me, Owain,
What if he does not come?

Owain. Impossible.
He never yet delayed the night there.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Never!
These will-o'-the wisps, 'never,' 'impossible,'
Misguide men to their ruin. What if he did?
There's not another boat on the island.

Owain. None.
But mother, do not with distracted horrors
Flaw the firm texture of resolved minds.
Rather we should drug deep imagination,
Leaving a mere mechanic sense to observe
An unmeaning light, nor search the invisible
Behind it, even for facts; to see her yonder,
Alone on the bar, and—Vengeance on all sight
But eyesight! What do we see here that's fearful?
A night much less tempestuous than most
Of this mad season, darkness and two lights.
Ah, but another, as I live! Yes surely;
'Tis gone now, but I'd swear—quick, mother, quick!
Bring me the telescope.

Mrs. Gwyllim. His telescope?
It is forbidden, I dare not.

Owain. You forget
How much you dare to-night.

Mrs. Gwyllim. [Laughing wildly.] Oh, I'm a fool,
A very idiot! I will fetch it. [Goes out.]

Owain. Now,
Gwyllim, my devil has yours by the throat;
They tussle up and down. Shall's wager on them?
Hike a good devil! Yours is a tough grey fellow,
Yet will I back my pup—he bears a name,
A dreadful name, whose echoes roar of blood
Down the black galleries of bottomless Hell
To the unplumbed primal void.

[To MRS. GWYLLIM, who re-enters with a telescope.]
You have it? Good!
You have been speedy.

Mrs. Gwyllim. I have brought the night-glass.

[Placing the telescope on a table between OWAIN and the window, and fumbling with it.]
I cannot fix it.

Owain. Come, give it to me.
Your hand shakes like a leaf. Do you see the light?

Mrs. Gwyllim. No, I—I cannot see anything.

Owain. There!
I have it. Look! That's the boat right enough,
She ducks to the hurrying seas. Again 'tis lost,
Twinkles again.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Hush! Do you hear that noise?
There—there—what can it be?

Owain. [Listening.] 'Tis Shonnin.
He's hammering on his bedroom door, poor fool,
Discreetly, thinking you'll go free him.

Mrs. Gwyllim. [Sinking on the floor, and hiding her face in the couch.] Shonnin!

Owain. You know his purpose. Well, if ours succeed——

Mrs. Gwyllim. Ah——

Owain. He's better where he is.
[Looking out of the window.] The wind
Sits on her quarter. She flies straight, too straight,
Can a drunkard hold her tiller? Asleep or drunk,
If but his hand be there, some instinct in it
Answers to wind and tide. Hell take his instinct!
We're in the balance now; this may prove weightier
Than all our conjurations.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Hark! Again!
And louder—louder. Heavens! He'll raise the house.

Owain. David's his only neighbour; he's as fixed
As a rock when once abed.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Promise me, Owain,
Whatever happens, Shonnin shall know nothing
Of this—this——

Owain. Shonnin, I fear, has heard so much
He needs must guess the whole.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Not my part in it.
I'll hang for you, Owain, but not that——

Owain. Be sure
He shall know nothing of it. Look! Look, mother!
By heaven, he's keeping off! He'll hold right on
To the other side the river. Does he not mark
The light? What does it mean?

Mrs. Gwyllim. Nothing, I think.
He backs against the wind, lest it should push him
Too suddenly ashore.

Owain. Plague on this caution!

Mrs. Gwyllim. She swings her light aloft; see, it burns strongly,
He cannot overlook it. Hark! What's that?

Owain. The knocking's over. I hear nothing.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Hush!

Owain. Steps overhead! Now may a thousand devils——

[The steps come downstairs and about the house. Shonnin is heard without, calling 'Mother!']

Mrs. Gwyllim [blowing out the light and crouching down behind OWAIN'S chair]. Ah—I knew it.

Shonnin [coming into the outer room]. Mother!

[He pushes the door of the inner room and enters.]
Is anyone here?

Why is it all so dark? I'm sure there's someone,
Though I cannot see. Who's there?
[Gropes round, and takes hold of OWAIN.]
You, Owain?

Owain. Shonnin? Is that you? You startled me.
I was asleep.

Shonnin. But why the devil here?

Owain. I was disinclined for bed. At times this chair
Appears the easier.

Shonnin. Where can mother be?
She's nowhere in the house. Yon lamp's extinguished,
Yet he is not returned. Owain, she's gone.

Owain. Well? May she not walk abroad?

Shonnin. What, mother?
Alone on this dark night? No, surely, unless—
Owain, my mind misgives me. That countenance
She wore this evening—strange to all discourse,
Fixed, desperately brooding. Oh, I should have guessed
The meaning!

Owain. Why, what meaning?

Shonnin. Self-destruction.

Owain. Nonsense. You are a dreamer. Search again.
She's asleep somewhere.

Shonnin. Yes, I have had dreams,

Horrible dreams. I almost could believe
Ill things afoot to-night.

Owain. Go—you disturb me.

Shonnin. 'Tis superstition. Where are flint and steel?
Ay, here they are. That lamp must be re-kindled,
Else there'll be cruel doings on his return.

[He goes into the outer room, and is heard walking about and striking a light. Presently he re-enters, with a lighted candle in his hand.]

What does this mean? There is no lamp.

Owain. Go, fool!

Shonnin. Why is the light on the shore so strangely placed?
'Tis almost opposite. Speak, Owain, man!
Say I am mad, tell me you are a dream,
A murderous dream. If not, you are a murderer.

Owain. I am, and I am justified. Content you;
You will be innocent.

Shonnin. I intend to be.
Who else is here? Is it Nelto? O my God! [Mrs. GWYLLIM rises to her feet.]
What are you doing here, mother? Why were you silent
When I came to seek you? Mother, answer me,
Don't look upon me thus; have pity on me—
Not pity, rather curse me, for on my soul
I do suspect you. Hate me for it, mother,

Only resolve my question. I am dull,
Dull, and a villain. Despise me, only swear,
My perfect gentle mother, make me an oath
By things religious, by the Almighty God
And the most merciful Christ, by Heaven's salvation
And all that angels wonder at—assure me
That you are innocent of the least knowledge
Of this unnatural crime.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Unnatural, Shonnin?
I was unnatural when I let this monster
Destroy my children. Yes, I watched him tamely.
A beast defends her young. Now that themselves
Defend themselves, though with an enforced violence,
I dare not thwart them. His blood be on his head,
And upon mine.

Shonnin. My mother! Merciful Heaven!

Mrs. Gwyllim. Would 'twere my brain conceived
this retribution,
And Owain at his book! Would 'twere my hand
Held yonder beckoning light, my little Nelto
Asleep with her sisters. Would that I alone
Were guilty, and they innocent. That's my regret.

Shonnin. Mother! My God, all's whirling in my head
And my heart too. Oh, this is sleep-walking!
Either you sleep or I. Wake—understand.
'Tis murder that's about, and worse than murder,

Because, however we may reason, this man,
This miserable man, is yet our father,
Your husband.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Ay, these vacant syllables
Had once power over me. Their spell is broken.

Shonnin. I dreamed I saw you dead, dead and corrupting.
I wish it had been true.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Why would you leave me?
It was not for myself—I have endured
An Indian's torture. Ropes of steel will break
At length with the ounce too much. Why would you leave me?
You should not have—

Shonnin. A truce to all reproaches.
I have no leisure for them; I must be doing.
Had he not locked me in or David heard me
Ten minutes earlier—

Owain. It was David, was it?
Trust not in fools, not even in their folly.

Shonnin. Yet there is time to save him.

[He reaches the door as MRS. GWYLLIM rushes to close it.]

Owain. Stop, stop, Shonnin.
There is not time. There's surf in the river mouth.
You cannot cross it.

Shonnin. I will, if necessary.

Mrs. Gwyllim. A stronger swimmer could not. You are cramped
If the water's cold.

Shonnin. A light's the thing most needed.

Owain. They have both the lanterns.

Shonnin [opening the door]. I'll go find a lamp
Instantly. [To his mother who clings to him.] Let me go.

Mrs. Gwyllim. You shall not go.
Or I'll go with you.

Shonnin. Mother, I'll not have you.
I cannot. No.
[After a minute MRS. GWYLLIM looses him. He goes out.]

Owain. Go then ! You are too late
To traverse our design so it do prosper ;
If not, why then his presence on the bar,
On the customary side were best for Nelto,
Safer for all of us.

Mrs. Gwyllim. I have lost my son.
His heart is changed. Whatever the event,
My penalty falls due. It was for his sake,
For all your sakes ; yet he'll not pardon me,
Not understand.

Owain. Shame ! Shame upon him then.
You always loved him best. O mother, mother,
I had most need of love, a thing so maimed
And disinherited !

Mrs. Gwyllim. My unhappy Owain,
Have I not loved you?

Owain. Yes, but not enough.
This night shuts up the passage of his heart
Against you? Well, some slight indifferent girl
Had done it to-morrow. I am yours unchangeably,
Yours only. This so-scorned detested deed
Knits up us two in an eternal friendship
Death can alone disjoin. You'll love me best,
Mother, me best?

Mrs. Gwyllim. My child, indeed I love you,
Always have loved and shall—but what I shall do
After to-night's not thinkable. Oh, this night
Opened like an abyss! We toppled down it,
And still we fall, whirling upon ourselves,
Unguiding and unguided, spinning down
An infinite blackness to an uncharted bottom.
Talk not of what we shall be when we've touched it.

Owain. I am too much, it seems, my father's son,
To be well loved; yet were I not so much,
Your wrongs had never been avenged upon him,
As soon as they may be—Ah! they shall be. See
He's round—he's round! There—there! his light
Flying this way.

Mrs. Gwyllim. He's not yet in, not landed.
Look! At the garden-gate—

Owain. Shonnin with a lamp.
What is it? Where did he find it?
Mrs. Gwyllim. A small lamp
In a wooden frame hangs on the cellar stairs.
He's thought of it.
Owain. A feeble flame enough,
Invisible at a distance, thank our fortune.
Stars of the starless night, in your blind courses
At length ye fight for us! Running like a hare.
Run, lad! We are before you.
Mrs. Gwyllim. Now Heaven grant
He may not attempt the river!
Owain. Oh, he'll not.
Shonnin's no dare-devil; don't consider it.
See, see, he's caught! I know as though 'twere noonday,
His sail's down; now he's pushing quietly in.
The light moves slow, damnation slow. Come, hurry!
Don't keep us all night on the gridiron. Look,
Mother—you are not looking.
Mrs. Gwyllim. I cannot look.
O—O me!
Owain. He'll land in another moment.
Nelto has met him: which is her lantern now?
Mrs. Gwyllim. Poor girl—poor wretch! I know not what to wish,
And pray we dare not.

Owain. They oscillate together.
One's moving now. Right! Coming across the bar.
Why does it stop? Push off, Nelto, push off!
Ay, now he moves again. The telescope!
[Looking through it.] The light's in his hand doubtless,
and lurches with him.
I know his gait o' nights. Plague seize you, girl,
Why do you loiter? Haste! You should be away.
Mrs. Gwyllim. The tide sets up the bar, the wind's against her,
And she—she's but a girl.
Owain. Ay, but a brave one,
And pulls a good oar. What! Do you suppose,
Were I other than I am, I'd leave her to it?
Would we were face to face, my knife in his heart,
Come after it what might come!
Bravely, Nelto!
She's under weigh at last. Pull for your life!
[Throws himself back in his chair.]
Our part is now accomplished. What remains
Let the inconscient sea, the accustomed tide
Hold to its issue.
Mrs. Gwyllim [hiding her face]. Oh! Oh! horrible—
Merciful God!
Owain. What is it?

Mrs. Gwyllim. Did you hear nothing?

Owain. No, not a sound.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Then 'twas my haunted fancy.

Owain. The light on the sand—Mother, do you see it?

Mrs. Gwyllim. No.

Owain. It has disappeared. That means—

Mrs. Gwyllim. He's sinking—
Down, down, down to the bottomless pit,
And our souls with him.

Owain. Do you understand
What the boat's doing?

Mrs. Gwyllim. It returns.

Owain. Returns?
Now divination fails and rife conjecture
Falls barren. Yet 'tis true.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Owain, that sound
I seemed to hear—what if it were a sound,
A hideous outcry, audible a moment
Even here?

Owain. Well—if it were? Infernal powers!
She is ashore. Yonder her light comes flitting
Over the bar. Oh, this is unbound madness!
It can't be Nelto, 'tis a Will-o'-the-wisp,
Or God knows who.

Mrs. Gwyllim. 'Tis she. An hour or more

Have we not watched her? She has a heart of flesh,
Ears has she not? How if, with scream on scream,
His agony pursued her? She's no monster.
She's gone to his assistance.

Owain. His assistance?

Mrs. Gwyllim. See, the light stops.

Owain. Ay, where his disappeared.
She can't assist him, oh, that's manifest.
Nelto is reasonable. The thing's not possible
For her unaided—would she were at sea,
Miles out in a gale—'twere better—

Mrs. Gwyllim. What can we do?

Owain. Nothing—we cannot reach her. Nay, she's safe.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Where's Shonnin?

Owain. [Looking through the telescope.] His lamp must be extinguished;
I cannot find—yes, on the opposite shore
I see it. It moves—and now is stationary.
The river mouth's impassable. He sees that.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Heaven send he may! Yet would he were across it!

[A silence.] Her light—it reddens, fades, and now 'tis gone. [OWAIN searches with the telescope.
You cannot find it?

Owain. Shonnin still seems yonder.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Seems—Ay, but is he? And Ellen?
Where is she?

Owain. Wait, mother—stay. The merest accident
May quench a light—they'll soon be coming home.
However, 'tis we are helpless.

Mrs. Gwyllim. O my God!
Why do I call on God? Let me call rather
On potencies of Hell, for they do owe us
Protection on their errands.

[There is again a silence.] Listen! The tide.
It has swirled about the bar; now half the quicksand
Is covered with long shallow crawling waves,
And swift as fire the thin pools run and deepen
On the other side, ankle-deep, knee-deep, waist-deep—
Do I need mine eyes? Have not my ears been filled
These twenty years with the sea's sound? I know
To a hair's-breadth where it is. Find me his light.

Owain. [Looking.] I have found it. Ah! This moment it is gone.

Mrs. Gwyllim. The tide o'er-runs it. Shonnin is not there.
I'll to the cottages and rouse—

Owain. Rouse no one,
'Twould but endanger us. 'Tis very like
They are in the boat, both of them safe enough,
Waiting for the flood tide.

Mrs. Gwyllim. I have no time
For smooth conjecture or slow-footed reason.
I must away, discover, know, do something,
Do something instantly. [Going out.

Owain. Do something? What?
We can do nothing.

SCENE VI

The same. The grey light of dawn coming in through the windows.

Owain. The day. Wherefore the day?
Rather perpetual suspensive night
Cover Ty Mawr. But still the rolling earth
Pushes her giant shoulder towards the sun,
And myriad eyes of myriad living things
Begin to shine expecting it.
I'll not look.
The dark sea drinks the greyness of the sky,
Then all's one wan immensity. What else?
What shall day show or not show? Let me cease
To think, for if I think my whole cramped mind,
Which yesterday harboured the universe,
Is packed to bursting with one thought, is nothing
Except that monstrous thought.
Had someone told me
Yesterday: By to-morrow he'll be dead,
And you will wish it yesterday once more,

I had merely laughed. But now, but now, if prayer
Could anything, my soul how I would pray
To have him back again, that loathed tyrant,
Bolting out venomous insults, swollen with fury
And unappeased malice ! To have him back !
So he would heave this nightmare from my heart.
Shonnin, Nelto, are dead? Impossible !
Would I could waken ! Oh, this hideous anguish
Must somehow end ! My heart, my brain will burst.
No, it must be endured. Come, be a man ;
For there's my mother's step on the garden-walk.
It hastens, yet methinks 'tis deeply loaded
With an assured calamity.

[Enter MRS. GWYLLIM, her skirts draggled with sand and water.

Well, mother?

Mrs. Gwyllim. [Showing a small shawl, dripping wet.
Nothing but this.

Owain. Nelto's. Where did you find it?

Mrs. Gwyllim. Just opposite, on the shore. I called old Williams
To bring his lantern.

Owain. Ay, 'tis Nelto's shawl.

Mrs. Gwyllim. What does that prove? Why, one lets drop a shawl Easily.

Not a word? You who've so many

Smooth and ingenious words will spare not one
To hold me from despair? You'd pity me
Did you but guess what an eternity
I have been searching for them.

Owain. I've been waiting
The same eternity.

Mrs. Gwyllim. See, see! I ve waded
Waist-deep and shrieked, holloaing against the wind
Till my throat cracked its strings; yet nothing answered
Save the hoarse sea-bird.
What of that? The wind
Blew back my voice. Shall one despair so soon?
The comfortable light brings hope. Look yonder,
A patch of solid darkness gathers in
From the universal grey. I've watched it shaping—
Clearly the boat now. 'Twere an easy thing,
Old Williams says, the boat being water-logged,
Just there, in such a tide to get aground.
They are waiting for the day.

Owain. Old Williams thinks so?
His eyesight fails. I would mine own confirmed him.
No, I'm not cruel. Mother, let's brace our hearts,
For now's the pivot moment that must swing us
From an unfixed suspense to a fixed knowledge
Less miserable however based with horror.
Mother, I think that boat is empty.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Look!
To me it seems there's somewhat lying there.
They sleep perhaps.

[OWAIN looks at the boat through the telescope.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Well?

[He turns it about, still looking.] What did you see?

Owain. There's something floating.

Mrs. Gwyllim. What? Who?

Owain. No one.
'Tis something small—a lamp, I think.

Mrs. Gwyllim. But the boat,
Look in the boat.

Owain. I have.

Mrs. Gwyllim. What did you see.

Owain. I saw the sail.

Mrs. Gwyllim. Nothing besides?

Owain. No, nothing.

Mrs. Gwyllim. There's someone lying under it?

Owain. No, no one.

Mrs. Gwyllim. [Taking the telescope.] You are mistaken, you must be mistaken,
For if they are not in the boat, where can they be?
I have looked and looked, there's not a possible place
But I have searched.

[Looks through the telescope, then turns away.

There's something in my eyes,
My hand trembles. Do you look again.

Owain. O mother!

Mrs. Gwyllim. Where are my children, if they are not there?
They cannot both be—Owain, where are they?

Owain. [Makes a gesture towards the sea.] Mother,
May God have mercy on us!

Mrs. Gwyllim. No, not both,
Not both! She's somewhere in the house. Come, Ellen!
She is afraid to come. Come, Nelto, Nelto!
Shonnin, my heart's adored, Shonnin, my love,
Do not be angry with me, answer, Shonnin,
Shonnin! Not dead—not dead!

Owain. O hush—hush—hush.

PRINTED BY
SPOTTISWOODE AND CO., NEW-STREET SQUARE
LONDON